Mowgli's brothers

One very warm evening in the Seonee hills in Southern India, Father Wolf woke up from his day's rest. Next to him lay Mother Wolf, with their four cubs beside her.

"It's time to look for food," said Father Wolf, and he stood up to leave the cave.

"Good luck," said a voice. It was the jackal, Tabaqui, who eats everything and anything, even pieces of old clothes from the villages. The wolves of India do not like him, because he runs around making trouble and telling bad stories about them.

"Shere Khan, the tiger, is coming to look for food here," said Tabaqui.

"Shere Khan is coming to look for food."

The text size is appropriate to each level.

Good spacing between the lines makes the text easier to read.

Carefully chosen illustrations support the text and control the amount of text on the page.

Most baby minibeasts come from eggs. Some minibeasts, like slugs and cutworms, lay their eggs in soil. Other minibeasts, like bees and bees, lay their eggs on plants. Scorpions don't lay eggs. They lay live babies. The baby scorpions crawl on their mother's back.

The babies of some flying insects look like their parents, but they don't have any wings. Baby grasshoppers don't have any wings. They grow wings when they get bigger. Some babies are larvae.
